The Simmering-Graz-Pauker factory produced four-axle mail coaches for the Austrian Postal Administration in various batches. Their design is similar to that of the Eurofima coaches. The coach body and interior fittings were tailored to meet the needs of the railway mail service. Mail was sorted on the train itself. The coaches were used in passenger, express, and fast trains. However, these special coaches also made their way to Germany, where they were employed in diverted trains in the Allgäu region and elsewhere.
